Earnings inside a traditional IRA are tax-deferred. Only amounts distributed from the account (shown above) are reportable as income for the year, on Form 1099-R. The reinvested dividends and capital gains are not separately taxable and are not reported on Form 1099-DIV.

Important Information and Disclosures

Tax-deferred account. This is a traditional individual retirement account established under Internal Revenue Code section 408(a). Distributions are generally taxable as ordinary income in the year received and are reported on Form 1099-R. Contributions, earnings, and the year-end fair market value are reported on Form 5498.

Required minimum distributions (RMDs). Under the SECURE 2.0 Act, RMDs from a traditional IRA generally must begin by April 1 following the year you reach the applicable required beginning age. Whether and when an RMD applies depends on your age and individual circumstances; consult a tax professional.

State income tax. The treatment of distributions from this account for state income tax purposes depends on your state of residence and individual circumstances. This statement is not tax advice; consult a qualified tax professional.

Cost basis. The reportable distribution amount and the taxable amount for each year are shown on your Form 1099-R. No Form 8606 (nondeductible contribution) basis information has been provided to us for this account.

Account protection. Brokerage accounts are carried by Vanguard Brokerage Services, a division of Vanguard Marketing Corporation, member FINRA and SIPC. SIPC protects securities customers of its members up to $500,000 (including $250,000 for claims for cash).
