Student loan interest deduction — general information

The interest shown in box 1 of each Form 1098-E is the amount of interest the lender received on the loan during the year. Whether any of this interest is deductible on your federal income tax return depends on your filing status and modified adjusted gross income. The student loan interest deduction is reduced (phased out) over a range of modified adjusted gross income that is adjusted annually, and the deduction is also limited to a maximum amount per return. See IRS Publication 970, Tax Benefits for Education, and the Form 1040 instructions to determine the amount, if any, you may deduct.

Repayment Information and Disclosures

Repayment plan options

Your loans are on a standard level-payment plan. Other repayment plans may be available, including graduated and extended plans for eligible loans. Changing your repayment plan may lower your monthly payment but increase the total interest you pay over the life of the loan.

Interest capitalization

Unpaid interest may be added to your principal balance (capitalized) at certain times, such as at the end of a deferment or forbearance. Capitalization increases your principal balance and the total amount of interest you pay.

Prepayment

You may prepay all or part of your loans at any time without penalty. Prepayments are applied first to any outstanding fees, then to accrued interest, then to principal, unless you instruct us otherwise.

Autopay benefit

Borrowers enrolled in automatic payments may be eligible for an interest-rate reduction of 0.25 percentage point. The rates shown reflect any applicable autopay benefit currently in effect on each loan.

Tax information

We furnish Form 1098-E to you and to the IRS for each loan on which you paid $600 or more in interest during the year. If you paid less than $600 on a loan, a 1098-E may not be furnished, but the interest may still be deductible; check your account records.

Glossary

Capitalization	The addition of unpaid interest to the principal balance of a loan.
Principal	The amount borrowed that remains to be repaid, excluding interest.
Servicer	The company that manages your loan, including billing and customer service.
Standard repayment	A plan with fixed monthly payments designed to pay off the loan over a set term.

Borrower Rights, Benefits, and Disclosures

Deferment and forbearance

Under certain circumstances — such as returning to school, economic hardship, or military service — you may be eligible to temporarily postpone or reduce your payments through deferment or forbearance. Interest generally continues to accrue during these periods and, if unpaid, may be capitalized.

Loan forgiveness and discharge

Certain loans may be eligible for forgiveness, cancellation, or discharge under specific programs, including for total and permanent disability or death. Eligibility depends on loan type and program rules. Contact us to learn whether your loans qualify.

Credit reporting

We report the status of your loans to the national credit bureaus. On-time payments help build your credit history; late or missed payments may harm it. If you dispute information we have reported, contact us and we will investigate.

Servicemembers Civil Relief Act

If you are on active military duty, you may be eligible for an interest-rate cap and other benefits under the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act and related programs. Contact us with documentation of your active-duty status to request these benefits.

Default and its consequences

Failing to make payments may lead to delinquency and, ultimately, default. Default can result in the entire balance becoming due, collection costs, negative credit reporting, and other consequences. If you are struggling to pay, contact us promptly to discuss options.

Cosigner release

If your loan has a cosigner, you may be able to request cosigner release after making a number of consecutive on-time payments and meeting credit requirements. Contact us for the current criteria and application.

Tax Benefits for Education — Summary (Publication 970)

The student loan interest deduction

The student loan interest deduction allows eligible taxpayers to deduct interest paid on a qualified student loan, as an adjustment to income, without itemizing. The loan must have been taken out solely to pay qualified higher-education expenses for the taxpayer, spouse, or a dependent at the time the debt was incurred.

Maximum deduction and income limits

The deduction is capped at a maximum amount per return regardless of the number of loans, and is phased out over a range of modified adjusted gross income that depends on filing status and is adjusted annually for inflation. Taxpayers whose modified adjusted gross income exceeds the top of the applicable range cannot claim the deduction. Married taxpayers who file separately cannot claim it at all.

Who can claim it

Generally, you can claim the deduction only if you are legally obligated to pay interest on a qualified student loan, you actually paid interest during the year, your filing status is not married filing separately, and you (and your spouse, if filing jointly) cannot be claimed as a dependent on someone else's return.

Coordinating with Form 1098-E

Box 1 of Form 1098-E shows the interest the lender received. Use the worksheet in the Form 1040 instructions or Publication 970 to figure your allowable deduction, which may be less than the amount in box 1 (or zero) depending on your income.

Changing your repayment plan may lower your monthly payment but generally increases the total interest you pay over the life of the loan. Contact us to model a specific plan for your accounts.

Tax Benefits for Education — Additional Detail

Qualified education loan. A qualified student loan is a loan you took out solely to pay qualified higher-education expenses for yourself, your spouse, or a dependent at the time the debt was incurred, for education provided during an academic period for an eligible student.

Qualified expenses. Qualified higher-education expenses generally include tuition, fees, room and board, books, supplies, and equipment, reduced by certain tax-free educational assistance.

Phaseout mechanics. The student loan interest deduction is reduced proportionally as modified adjusted gross income rises through the phaseout range and is eliminated once income exceeds the top of the range for your filing status.

Married filing separately. If you file as married filing separately, you cannot claim the student loan interest deduction at all, regardless of income.

Coordination with other benefits. You cannot deduct as student loan interest any amount you deduct under another provision, and you must reduce qualified expenses by tax-free assistance such as scholarships and employer education assistance.

Capitalized interest and fees. Voluntary payments of interest, capitalized interest, and certain loan origination fees may count as interest for the deduction. Your Form 1098-E reflects the interest the lender received during the year.

Borrower Account Policies

Payment processing. Payments received by the daily cutoff are credited the same business day. Payments are applied to accrued interest first, then to principal. You may direct extra payments to principal by contacting us.

Autopay. Enrolling in automatic payments may provide an interest-rate reduction and helps ensure on-time payments. You can enroll, change, or cancel autopay through your online account.

Statements and notices. Billing statements are issued before each due date. Year-end statements and Forms 1098-E are issued in January. You are enrolled in electronic delivery and may request paper copies.

Late payments. A payment is late if not received by the due date plus any grace period. Late payments may incur a fee and may be reported to credit bureaus. Contact us promptly if you anticipate difficulty paying.

Cosigners. If a loan has a cosigner, both the borrower and cosigner are responsible for repayment. Cosigner release may be available after a number of consecutive on-time payments and a credit review.
