Interest Accrual Detail

Interest accrues daily on the unpaid principal balance of each loan group using a daily interest factor. The factor equals the interest rate divided by the number of days in the year.

How Your Payment Is Applied

Each scheduled payment is applied first to any outstanding fees, then to accrued interest, and finally to principal. When you have multiple loan groups, the principal portion is generally distributed across groups in proportion to their balances unless you direct otherwise.

You may direct extra payments to a specific loan group, for example the group with the highest interest rate, by providing written instructions. Absent instructions, extra amounts are applied according to the standard allocation method.

Component	This payment
Scheduled payment	$1,847.00
Applied to fees	$0.00
Applied to interest	$918.62
Applied to principal	$928.38

Repayment Plan Information

Standard repayment

Fixed monthly payments over a set term until the loans are paid in full. This generally results in the least total interest among the standard options.

Graduated repayment

Payments start lower and increase over time, typically every two years.

Income-driven repayment

Monthly payments are based on income and family size; remaining balances may be eligible for forgiveness after a qualifying period for eligible federal loans.

Private loan terms

Private loans are governed by their own promissory notes and may have different options than federal loans.

Interest Rates & Capitalization

Federal loan interest rates are generally fixed for the life of the loan. Unpaid interest may capitalize—be added to principal—after certain events, such as the end of a deferment or forbearance, increasing the balance on which future interest accrues.

Making payments that at least cover accrued interest prevents the balance from growing. Paying more than the scheduled amount reduces principal and the total interest paid over the life of the loan.

Deferment & Forbearance

Deferment and forbearance temporarily postpone or reduce payments under qualifying circumstances. Interest may continue to accrue during these periods and, for unsubsidized and private loans, is the borrower's responsibility.

Contact the servicer before missing a payment to discuss available options. Postponing payments increases the total cost of the loan if interest capitalizes.

Loan Forgiveness & Discharge Programs

Certain federal loans may qualify for forgiveness or discharge programs, including public service loan forgiveness and discharge for total and permanent disability. Eligibility requirements and qualifying payment rules apply. Private loans are generally not eligible for federal programs.

Review program requirements carefully before relying on potential forgiveness. Keep records of qualifying employment and payments where applicable.

Tax Information

Interest you pay on qualified student loans during the year may be reported to you on Form 1098-E, Student Loan Interest Statement. The servicer issues Form 1098-E when reportable interest of $600 or more is paid on an account during the calendar year.

Whether interest is deductible on your tax return depends on your individual circumstances. Consult the instructions for your tax return or a tax professional regarding your situation.

Payment Methods & Autopay

Your account is enrolled in automatic monthly payments from your linked checking account on the scheduled due date.

Borrowers enrolled in autopay for eligible federal loans may receive an interest rate reduction as described in the autopay terms.

You may also pay online, by phone, or by mail. Payments received after the due date may result in late fees on private loans and may affect your account status. Extra payments reduce principal and total interest.

To change your autopay amount, due date, or to direct extra payments to a specific loan group, submit instructions through your online account or contact the servicer.
